Throughout my life I have had a creative streak. Growing up I was very artistic, sketching in pencil and pen & ink, painting with watercolors and acrylics, throwing pottery, writing poetry and short stories, and playing saxophone and piano.

I went on to study Architecture at the University of Miami, and after working in Computer Aided Drafting for some time I developed a fascination with computer networking. I changed career paths, and went on to work as a network administrator and engineer from 1997-2010. I still integrate my artistic calling with computers by volunteering for various non-profits doing graphic design and web development.
